Work on Invitation To U. S. Under Way

By United Press.
PARIS, Nov. 3.—We are trying to reach an accord upon the terms of the invitation to be extended to the United States' Premier Poincare said today after a conference with the British ambassador. Poincare also conferred with the American ambassador, Myron T. Herrick, but the premier asserted this was merely a social call. No official word has come regarding the attitude of Washington, following Poincare's speech at Novres wherein he announced France's refusal to change her policy toward Germany, but Poincare reiterated that his stipulation in that address would merely limit the work of the experts as to keep it within the bounds of the Versailles Treaty.

Buick Open Cars are Stormtight

Perfect protection is provided from rain and wind. The lower frame of the windshield fits into a permanent rubber grommet. Moulded rubber seals every joint between the frames and posts. At the top a new weatherstrip, steel reinforced, excludes all air that might enter between the windshield and top, and side curtains button to the windshield, instead of the posts, covering the slight crack between them.

In addition to these and numerous other refinements, Buick four-wheel brakes afford a greater degree of safety on all models.

On Th' Auto Outlook

THE AUTO CONGESTION AROUND THE FAIRY GROTTO THEATRE ANY NIGHT.

As a GENERAL thing statistics and figures make pretty dry reading, but Tell Binkley has summed up the automobile industry in this country in one of the most astounding and amazing articles we've ever waded through. For instance he says the sales of pleasure cars have long since surpassed the sales of all other articles that enter into our daily lives with the exception of cigars, and probably bread. Then we read:

For ever family that crosses the continent in a automobile the railroad doesn't lose nothing, as the family wouldn't have started if it hadn't had a car.

There's more folks paying five dollars a month on cars than voted for Gov. Cox in 1920.

The number of cars stolen each day is greater than the male population of the Straits Settlements.

There's more criminal escape in high powered cars annually than in the combined population of Tibet, Burma, and possibly the Canary Islands.

There's two million times as many inhabitants in Bombay as there's pedestrians in this country.

The number of cars parked around the average country town courthouse on Saturday night is three and one-half times greater than the population of the Orkney Islands.

The peak of the auto industry won't be reached till 1928, when the replacement demand will exceed three and one-half million cars of all types annually, or enough to insure full running time for ever industry allied with the auto business.

There's two-thirds as many auto loan companies as there are French dry cleaners in America.

There's enough color varnish used on autos ever workin' day to float our navy.

For ever nickel that goes for washin' an' sewin' machines in this country nine dollars is rung up for gasoline.

There's enough steel goes into the making of ring gears annually to build two hundred and thirty-nine new fireproof movie theaters.

There's twice over as many auto prospects in the United States today as there are cobras in German East Africa and Uganda combined.

There's enough auto speedometer cables in commission in Iowa alone to reach around Australia once and a half.

The foot energy expended on auto accelerators on a single party Sunday in the middle states is thirty thousand times as great as the combined horsepower of Niagara Falls and the Roosevelt dam.

More cars are owned in the immediate vicinity of Danville, Indiana, than are owned in Denmark, Java, Siam, Japan or Costa Rica combined, and half as many in Ireland, Gibraltar.

There's more automobile publicity men than there are inhabitants in the Malay Archipelago.

There's two hundred and fifty-one thousand more closed cars in commission east of the Mississippi river than there are used parlors throughout the nation.

The decrease in pedestrians in the United States is three per cent greater than the annual decrease in giraffes.

Rubber Roads Latest Way to Stop Noise

By United Press.
BRADFORD, England, Nov. 3.—Rubber roads, constructed of worn-out automobile tires, will be laid in this city as soon as the remainder of a large stock of used casings can be compressed into paving blocks.

The city engineer has been collecting old tires for many months and the process of converting them into blocks is nearly complete.

The scrap rubber was obtained at little cost and it is estimated that the rubber pavement can be laid at a cost of $9 a square yard on the 1,600 square yards of roadway which will be rubberized as an experiment.

For larger areas this cost can be lowered to $3.45 per square yard.

Bradford was originally paved with material suitable to horse traffic.

Automobiles have superseded the horse and rendered the noisy, rough old roadways unnecessary.

Cork paving blocks, blocks of waste glass compressed to shape and combinations of iron and concrete have been considered, but the elimination of noise is expected to be the best attained by means of rubber.

In London the work of surrounding the Connaught, in memory of the Emperor's war dead, with rubber paving is almost complete.

The two experiments are being closely watched by European road builders, anxious to alter their trade to suit the changed conditions of motor traffic.

WIDOWS LIVE IN A PALACE

Structure at Hampton Court Occupied by Penitents of King George—Built by Cardinal Wolsey.

At least one Sunday a year I like to spend among the romantic surroundings of Hampton Court, built by the great Cardinal Wolsey but taken from him by Henry VIII. I have often wondered why this dignified palace is not used as a background by some enterprising "movie" producer, says Sir John Foster Fraser.

It is a delight to wander through the beauteous hall and the audience chamber and the king's bedroom and the queen's antechamber and look at the paintings by Peter Leys and Godfrey Kneller of the ladies who were court favorites in the roistering days of the restoration after Charles II came back to the throne.

I generally go down to Hampton Court to visit a dear old lady, for though the palace belongs to the king, he makes no use of it except that he gives suites of apartments to the not very well-to-do widows of men who have served the state in some distinguished capacity. Can you imagine a more charming gift than a suite of apartments in a place like Hampton Court with its peace and unruffled old world gardens?—Arts and Decorations.

"WHAT LOVE WILL DO," on view today at this theatre, is one of the best pictures filmed in many months. Kenneth McDonald, the star, as Duke Pemberton, ill-fated young man, pursued by a flax which prevents him from being successful at any task he attempts, has every requisite for the position of star. Youth, good looks, a splendid physique, and the ability to perform athletic stunts and thrills with an ease and grace you will marvel at.

"THE WESTBOUND LIMITED," starring Edith Hall and Ralph Lewis, is the feature attraction today at this theatre.

The attractive and artistic scenes showing interiors of several beautiful mansions are shown in all their glory in this picture production. The most beautiful and easily draped and curvilinear that could be secured were utilized by Director Johnson in filming the residential scenes. One of the big interiors in "Westbound Limited" shows a long, deep library, hall and living room that mark an epoch in the manner of dressing and arranging a stage for a moving picture production.

Included in the cast are John Dowers, Blanche Sweet, Lon Chaney, Barbara La Marr, Elmo Lincoln, Louise Fazenda, Joseph Dowling, June Elvidge, Gale Henry and Kate Lester. Monday, Tuesday and Wednesday, "Thrilling Women" featuring Barbara La Marr and Ramon Novarro will be shown.

Bread Line Is Growing In Germany

Poor Suffer For Necessities While The Profiters Gorge Themselves.

By GUS M. QUINN
(United Press Staff Correspondent)
BERLIN, Nov. 3.—Field kitchens, once used to feed Germany's fighting hordes, today are used to cook food for the hungry among the country's unemployed.

As part of Prussia's program of "one loaf and a day for every deserving person in the country," rolling army kitchens—armed with steaming kettles—array stew sold up each noon at designated spots throughout Berlin and other cities, and Salvation Army lassies dish out generous portions to awaiting hundreds.

Little children, scarcely able to toddle up to the awaiting depot; old men and women so frail and weak they often need the assistance of the younger and stronger; strong men simply out of work and out of funds—in fact, every kind of hungry individual imaginable—stand for hours awaiting the approach of the rumbling old kettles-wagons.

The blind and weak among those assembled are sorted out by the Salvation Army folks and brought to the front that they may be served first—and be sure of their meal.

The crowds which visit these rolling kitchens grow from day to day as now hundreds are thrown into unemployment and as others, finally driven by hunger, are forced to put aside their pride and face their fellowmen and eat of public charity.

Every person fed by the Salvation Army must obtain a certificate showing his need for such support. This he must present. Occasionally, when food remains, other struggling, peering hungrily into the kettles, are fed and more often those who have received ample portions offer to divide with fellow-sufferers who have not yet obtained the card necessary to provide them with the one warm meal the government hopes every German will obtain throughout the cold months.

And nearby, in the brilliantly lighted restaurants, where music mingles with the music of the clink of champagne flutes, newly rich gorge themselves with the finest delicacies that paper money can buy.

These blighted war and post-war profiteers—whose number in Germany are legion—think little and apparently care less about their hungry fellow-countrymen standing outside to divide a few crumbs of bottled meat, a little rice and some thin stew as their share of the day's necessities.

SUNDAY FOOTBALL A MENACE TO AMATEUR SPORT.

Amateur football, the viewpoint of the friends of amateur sport and the concern they have lost this popular school and college game is dangerously menaced, if not destroyed, through the professionalization attending Sunday playing. Amos Alonzo Stagg, the veteran athletic director of the University of Chicago, has sounded a public warning which has all the vigor and force of one who loves the game and who, from his intimate knowledge of it, speaks with authority. In his statement issued to college football coaches Director Stagg says:

"It seems like a matter of little consequence for me to attend the Sunday professional football games—nothing more than attending any Sunday event—but it has a deeper meaning than you realize, possibly a vital meaning to college football. Intercollegiate football will live only so long as it contributes to the well being of the students, that is while the influence of the game is predominantly on the side of amateur principles, right ideals, proper standards and wholesome conditions.

"For years, the colleges have been waging a bitter warfare against the incursion of the gambling public and against over-zealous and short-sighted friends, inside and out, and also not infrequently crooked coaches and managers who have been anxious to win at any cost, and victory has been completely won. And now comes another serious menace, possibly greater than all other, viz: Sunday professional football.

"Under the guise of fair play, but notwithstanding the fact that in playing men under assumed names scores of professional teams have sprung up within the last two or three years, most of them on a salary basis of some kind. These teams are building hard for college players in order to capture not only their ability but also, and more important, their money. And now comes another serious menace, possibly greater than all other, viz: Sunday professional football.

hundred of quotations hence the designers can be assured that their efforts please and inform the public will be appreciated. In previous parades the float section has been one of the most conspicuous both in point of effectiveness and beauty of display. They lend color and variety to the parade and show the sidewalk throngs that larger places have nothing on Connelville when it comes to staging a noteworthy show.

It is hoped, therefore, that advantage will be taken of the opportunity to assist in making the Armistice Day parade all that it ought to be as representative of Connelville's abilities and resources to stage a really notable demonstration.

Doubtless a consuming fear, not to say great consternation, pervades the ranks of the corporations of Fayette county because of the dire threat made by the Arch Street Corporation of the Secret of the Missing 15 that, if corporation officials dare vote the Republican ticket next Tuesday, it will feel that it has no alternative save to institute a reign of "mob law."

The Unlabeled Views Sub-Standard, presumably speaking, ex cathedra, says that "The good Lord never intended that any person or party should have a monopoly of government in these United States." The inability of Democrats as persons and the party to which they belong collectively to hold tenure longer than two terms at the maximum forces us, somewhat reluctantly, of course, to accept our contemporary's observation as historically correct, not to say as also in entire accord with the decrees of Providence.

Careful scanning of the columns and pages of political "slush" in the Democratic organs reveals the fact that there are but two candidates on the ticket of the party this year—sheriff and district attorney. This must be encouraging to those candidates who are under the impression that they were nominated for other offices at the primary.

Church and Education

(Editor's Note: This is the third of the United Press series in preparation for National Education Week.)

By REV. JAR. FREEMAN, D. D., Bishop of Washington.

(Copyright, 1923, by United Press.)
 WASHINGTON, Nov. 3.—The relation that the church bears to the large interests of education and patriotism is most intimate. As the security of the state depends upon an intelligent and loyal citizenship, it is the clear duty of the church to use its large influence to promote these important ends.

It was one of the most practical New Testament writers who said: "If a man love not his brother whom he hath seen, how can he love God, whom he hath not seen?"

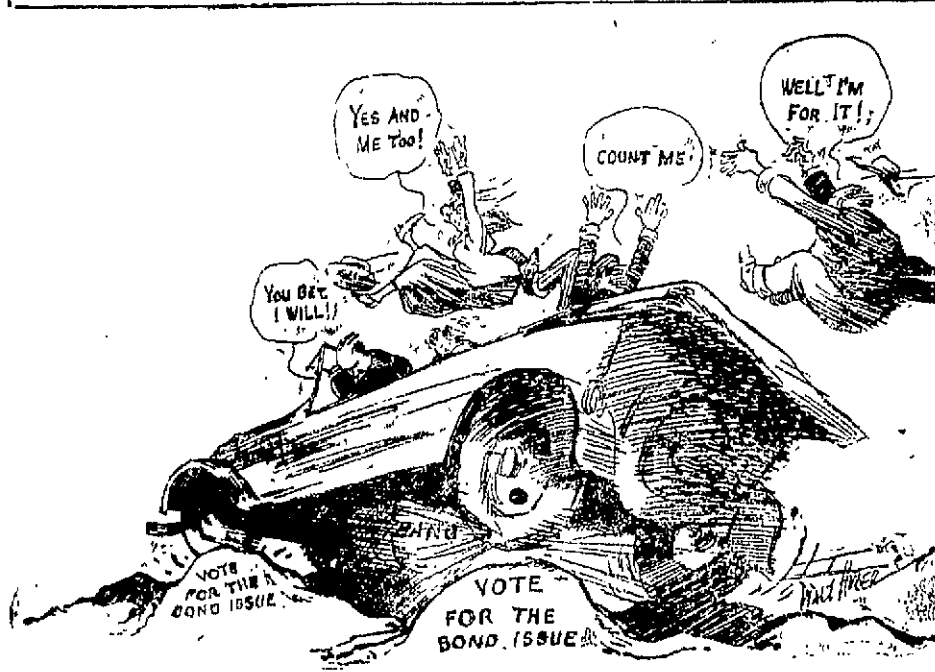

Ignorance as one of the basic causes of moral delinquency, and misunderstanding of the aims, purposes and ideals of the nation is one of the most pregnant causes of disloyalty. It is the business of every pulpit and of every church to seek to banish ignorance and to inculcate the spirit of love of country. In no small degree the very security of the church itself is jeopardized where ignorance prevails and disloyalty to national ideals goes unchallenged and unrebuked.

The fact that we have separated church and state in this country does not in any sense release the church from its obligation to serve the state. More and more it must be made evident that religion is a practical and indispensable factor in all that concerns the well of our people.

 It is going to take a lot of argument to persuade Phil Sain to change his name to Patinski.

Power From Springdale.
 Electric power from the Springdale powerhouse of the West Penn Power Company, situated at Springdale, along the Allegheny River, was turned into the Latrobe circuit this week, thus completing a loop extending from Springdale to Latrobe, to Youngwood and then back to Springdale. Heretofore, Latrobe has been dependent entirely upon the power furnished through the Youngwood substation.

Short Talks on Advertising

Copyrighted By Charles Austin Bates New York, 1923

No. 6.
 How many of us stop to realize what our daily newspapers means to us? And how few of us there are in these United States who do not read a daily newspaper every day.

When we are away from home we get the paper of the place in which we happen to be. It isn't quite as comforting as our own home paper, but it starts or ends the day properly.

The transcontinental traveler from New York is out on the platform at the various stops and gets the world's news from the newspapers of Port Wayne, Chicago, Omaha, Des Moines, Denver, Ogden and Sacramento before he arrives in San Francisco. And when we are in Bermuda we buy the daily "Colonial" every morning not so much for its few inches of colored news as because we have the daily paper habit. And we read with interest the local news of people we do not know and never will know. We read the advertisements of the Bermudian merchants and what we need we buy from them—giving preference, of course, to goods whose brands we know because we have met them in our home papers as well as in the "Colonial." And so advertising makes us safe and comfortable wherever we go.

After all, isn't the news we get in the advertising more important in our daily lives than nine-tenths of that which the news columns carry?

Aren't we more affected by the advent of a new and better dentifrice or by a special sale of shoes or furniture, than we are by the result of an election in England or of a divorce suit in New York?

Advertising is the news that launches all of us every day. It tells us how to live that very day more comfortably, more economically.

Avoid the Discomforts of Winter

The man who spends most of his time inside does not require as heavy underwear as the man of the outdoors. The selection of underwear best suited to your particular needs goes a long way toward real comfort and protection from colds. To get a garment that will protect you and at the same time "feel right" is the garment a host of people are looking for. Union Supply Company's lines for men, women, and children are second to none in this respect. Only the best makes are carried. In our stocks you will find a good selection of materials—cotton, wool, mixtures, and mercerized—in light, medium, or heavy weight. These suits are made to fit snugly. They will retain their shape after repeated washings; they will not bind; the buttons stay on—just about perfection in underwear, we believe. Two piece suits for those who prefer them. Dunbar Township High Is Victor Over German Twp. High Team; Score Is 6-0

Touchdown by Shallenberger After 40-Yard Run Is Only Score Made.

REDSTONE TWP. IS NEXT

The Dunbar Township football team, which struck its stride last week by defeating the last East Huntingdon Township High team, continued the pace yesterday afternoon, scoring a victory over the German Township eleven by the narrow margin of one touchdown.

The game was hard-fought throughout, with the Dunbar team playing a fine game, played at Trotter, was attended by many enthusiastic fans of the township, who once more saw an opportunity in possibly a win from Connelville High on Thanksgiving.

Dunbar Township's touchdown came after a 40-yard run by Shallenberger, who was downed on the four-yard line. On the next play a punter stepped up and then he kicked the end of a score. Bradley failed to kick the goal and the score stood at 6-0.

The game was made in the third quarter. Earlier in the game the visitors had a half on the visitors' 20-yard line, but failed in an attempt at a drop-kick.

A kick by Dunbar Township's first offense repulsed all efforts of the visitors.

visiting eleven to postulate it. Next week Redstone Township High will be at Trotter. The game will be on Saturday. The township team has now won four and lost two games.

For Football Fans. High School is already preparing for the "big" game next week with Monessen and the "bigger" one two weeks later with Greensburg. Both will be played at Fayette Field and the Connelville cheering body will turn out en masse for both contests. With Scottsdale failing to schedule with the Cokers this year the reality "big" game was lost. Nevertheless interest is rapidly centering about Monessen and Greensburg.

J. E. Shott, a teacher in the High School, has been placed in charge of the special activities in preparation for the two games. Additional cheerleaders will be held and every effort made to "pep up" the rooters.

With the team seemingly gaining strength each week there is a tendency for greater enthusiasm among the students and this will be fully developed.

McKeesport High School, defeated by Connelville last week, won only a Tatum yesterday by a score of 3-0.

Monongahela plays at Monessen today. Monessen is here next Saturday.

High School And Indiana Play Today

This afternoon at 3 o'clock teams of the Indiana High School and Connelville High School will line up at Fayette Field. It will be the first time Indiana H. has ever played a game here and considerable interest attaches to the game. Just what the score will be is an uncertainty. Latrobe won over Indiana by a big score and the showing of Connelville against the Westmoreland county outfit would indicate the locals should also win big over the visiting team.

It is rather indefinite line-up that Coach Loefer has in mind. He may allow Long to start at Wardley's end and Edmonds will possibly be at tackle in place of Marietta. Welsh may be at fullback instead of Trump but none of these changes are definite.

Playgrounds Agent Speaks. Wendell B. Thompson, field agent of the National Playgrounds Association, addressed the Rotary Club at its weekly luncheon Thursday. He praised the work in Connelville.

MOTHERS AND THEIR CHILDREN

Fostering Cleanliness

There is a difference between removing dirt and fostering cleanliness. When my daughter comes in with her hands dirty I say, "Misses Mary, quite contrary, how does your garden grow?" Then I wash the soles, pointing to the nails, oval like belts, the knuckles which are the shining cockleshells, and the ten fingers which should be the "pretty maid all in a row." She laughs ruefully when her "garden" is untidy and runs to clean up. The command, "Go wash your hands," would not make the same impression, nor would it arouse interest in keeping her hands pretty.

For Dress-Up Occasions

When dress-up occasions demand a frock that will answer for dinner, dances and other festivities, the good style of silk, crepe or lace or the two combined, is assured. Here is a pretty, straight-line crepe dress, draped with the fullness of the ankle-length skirt brought to the front. A giraffe of the crepe ends in a large petal rosette and a wide border of lace, bound with the crepe, lengthens into a cape at the back. Gray, sand, sapphire blue, cocoa, carnation and peach color are lovely with cream lace.

Printed and Plain Gowns

Printed and plain materials combine to make some of the smartest of the new frocks—a frock not only becoming but economical as well, because it lends itself to the use of ornaments or the wearing of an old dress. In one instance, the foundation is a straight-line model so simple that it needs practically no making, to which are added applied front and back panels, and a cape back that may be left off if one doesn't care for it—though cape-backs are good this year, and for the figure that curves against the mode's decree, such an article is well designed. The rolled giraffe, too, is used, but one may substitute a narrow belt if one prefers.

TRAVEL BY WATER CHUTE

Flume Filled With Water Offers Thrills in Small Boat in Mountains of Sierra Nevada.

In the mountains of Sierra Nevada, the water chute, or flume, is used as a means of traveling from one spot to another. The flume is V-shaped and made of wood. It stands on wooden trestles, sometimes where it crosses deep ravines of immense height. A swift and strong current of water, chiefly used for floating logs and sawn timber, is constantly running down the chute.

The boat made to navigate the flume is also V-shaped and its inside is made of about an inch of water. Only a passenger is carried at a time, and he has to sit as far forward as possible in order to tip up the back of the little craft. In steep places the pace is great, quite twenty miles an hour being reached.

Hiding the flume is full of thrills, though the little craft runs smoothly and as there is no machinery, without vibration. But when once it is started on its journey it cannot be stopped until it reaches its destination. The sensation of rushing along through space at such a speed is wonderful. But it is a mode of traveling that only recommends itself to the strong-nerved.—London Answers.

Fight Fire With Steam

In the great oil fields of the West, where the ever-present danger of fire haunts the drillers, steam has been found to be one of the most effective means of combating the flames. As a flash of lightning, a spark from a piece of metal, or a lighted match, may start a blaze that will result in the destruction of millions of dollars' worth of property, countless guard is maintained over the wells. Nevertheless, fires are frequent, and batteries of steam boilers are kept in readiness to fight them, as water would only add to their spread. When a gusher turns into a volcano of liquid fire, it is surrounded by a sand bucket to catch the blazing oil; then huge boilers are brought up and jets of live steam are turned into the heart of the flames, slowly smothering them.—Popular Mechanics.

"Our Post"

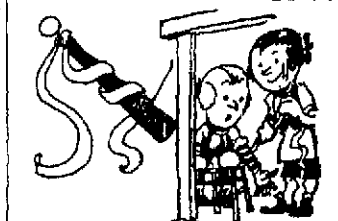

"How doth not only show the way, but gives us a glimpse into the life of the past. It is a book that we should read as if it were a mirror, and through a fair vision, at the very first give you a glimpse of the past, that full of that taste, you may long to possess further. How beguiling not with obscure definitions, which must blur the margin with interpretations, and loads the memory with doubtful sense; but here comes to you with words that are in beautiful proportion, either accompanied with or prepared for the well understanding skill of Misses, and with a tale smooth here comes unto you, with a tale which holds children from play, and old men from the chimney corner."—Sir Philip Sydney

Haunted by Lightning

An Australian government inspector, traveling in the northern territory, was caught in an appalling storm and took refuge in a tunnel in the rocks. This place was about 100 yards long, 20 feet wide and 20 feet high. When the storm and darkness began to pass the inspector realized that close by him were a number of unburied bodies. He counted between forty and fifty. The natives told him that these were the remains of a tribe that had camped in the tunnel during a storm, and had all been killed by lightning. They were amazed that he had survived, for they spoke of the place as being "haunted by lightning."

Popping in the Making

Corn popping is an explosion due to the expansion, under pressure, of moisture contained in the starch granules. Until the explosion takes place, the force is contained by the starch matrix in which the starch grains are imbedded. As a result of popping, there is a hydrolysis of much of the starch, a loss of moisture, and the obliteration of all cellular structure in the endosperm.

MRS. LINDQUIST TELLS WOMEN OF MIDDLE AGE

What Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound Did for Her

Kansas City, Mo.—"I was left in a very serious condition after childbirth and no one thought I could ever be any better. Then came the 'Change of Life' and I was not prepared for what I had to go to bed at times to be perfectly quiet as I could not even stoop down to pick anything from the floor. I did not suffer any pain, but I was decidedly nervous and could not sleep. For nearly two years I was this way, and the doctor was frank enough to tell me that he could do no more for me. Shortly after this I happened to see in a newspaper an advertisement of Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound. A few days the medicine was in the house and I had begun its use and I took it regularly until I was well. I recommend the Vegetable Compound to other women who have the opportunity."—Mrs. MAY LINDQUIST, 2814 Independence Ave., Kansas City, Mo.

Many of the first batteries put on the market more than two years ago are still serviceable, it is said.

Stability

Stability in saving is a great essential in gaining wealth. A constant effort and uniform method of depositing your savings will bring about that long-dreamed-of purpose. When stability is once practiced and carried out, it is difficult to overthrow. With stability we always find the right kind of character—that of sober and superior citizens. Enforcement of Reparatons by I. C. C. Attacked

The right of the Interstate Commerce Commission to award damages to coal operators suffering reparation because of the alleged failure of two railroads, one owing the other, to "pool" their coal cars for unified distribution to mines along their respective lines, was raised in the United States Circuit Court at Philadelphia this week.

Circuit Judge Wooley and District Judges Schoonmaker and Gibson heard a petition by the Pittsburg & West Virginia Railway Company for an injunction to restrain the Pennsylvania and West Virginia coal companies from filing suits against it to enforce reparation awards by the commission totaling $155,272.24.

The companies are the Avella Coal Company, the Meadow Coal Company, Waverly Coal & Coke Company, Duquesne Coal & Coke Company and David L. Newell, receiver of the Pittsburg & West Virginia Coal Company.

The Pittsburg & West Virginia Company owns 21,300 out of 21,400 shares of the Westside Belt Railroad Company. The latter, it is claimed, has more coal cars to distribute to mines in its territory than the parent corporation has for operations along its line, and the commission, holding that the two corporations are virtually a unit, ruled that the production of the two companies should have pooled equally distributed among the shippers.

The Pittsburg company owned all but one mine along the Westside belt line, and it was complained by the operators along the Pittsburg system they were forced to cut their working hours because of lack of cars.

Counsel for the Pittsburg company maintained there is no legal stand-

JOSEPH GREER and His DAUGHTER

By HENRY KITCHELL

BOBBS-MERRILL CO.

But if the direct result of that Sunday morning excursion was unimportant, its by-products were not. John Williamson in his gun-room was, it is hardly too much to say, a revelation to Joe. Joe began to perceive that Williamson here in his place—his fortress, if you like—was a different man; freer, perhaps, on the surface, but that was just hospitality—his underneath more arrogant. And, perhaps, formidable? The question rang in Joe's mind like a tap on a big bell. He answered it with a grin. All the better if the still-fed could show a little rodder blood than he had credited them with.

Corbett, who came walking across the lawn to the gun-room door just about then, had a new look about him, too. Joe had never seen him before except in business clothes. He was dressed now in knickerbockers, a sport shirt, and a sleeveless shooting-vest, unbuttoned, and the sight of his neck and forearms gave Joe something more to think about. He wasn't used to having to concede an unquestionable physical superiority to those in whose company he found himself. He'd often thought of Gregory as some one out of whom it would be fun to take a fall. Here was a misconception thoroughly corrected. The man's strength was evidently prodigious.

Joe said as he shook hands with him, "I'd never have written that letter if I'd seen you first with your coat off." "I might have kept my shirt on, though," Corbett replied, and blinked as if in surprise at the unfamiliar criticism. He added, seriously and a little stiffly, his appreciation of Joe's second letter, and said he didn't believe there'd be anything more to complain of to Corbett & Co's execution of the order. Business wasn't mentioned again all the morning.

All the traps he watched derisively while Williamson scored twenty-two hits out of twenty-five chances, and Corbett twenty-four. It was almost absurd, he thought, to be obliged to shoot at a known range, eighteen yards. You held your gun at your shoulder. You said "Pull!" to the trigger, or whatever they called him. He pulled, and the admiring target flew off at one of three predetermined angles, in rotation. And you blazed away at it with a shell containing two scores of bird-shot. His own failure to score more than one out of a possible twenty-five didn't raise his opinion of the sport so very much, either. When he had finished his frame he laid his gun in the rack and told the servant that he'd manage the lever while the man went to his motor and fetched an automatic pistol and a box of cartridges which he'd find in the left front-door pocket.

His impression was that both the other men regarded this proposal, as put at bay pigeons with a revolver, as ludicrous, but nevertheless amusing, and it was with a boyish air of guilt that they drew up when his turn came to see what sort of luck he had. He moved up to five-yard range and told the man at the lever to pull whenever he liked and to mix up his angles. "Shoot me if you can," he added. "Get the lever?" This was out of a position that no well-trained servant could possibly execute, so, after a trial or two, Williamson relieved him. Joe, following up his birds, managed to smash eight out of the frame, which both the others agreed was extraordinary shooting. Williamson, taking his turn, with Joe at the lever, got only three. As he turned away he offered the pistol to Corbett. "This man," he supposed to be the best revolver-shot in Lake county," he explained. "He'll give you a better run for your money." But Corbett thought he wouldn't try it that morning. "Throw us off my draw," he explained. "Looks no end of fun, though."

Joe, blazing away again in his turn, was startled by a new voice—a woman's, speaking from close by. "Is this Charles Thayer or what?" He spun round and looked, and the first thought was that this was the girl whose portrait, in chalk, he'd seen in Williamson's office. The next moment she cut cleanly through the jumbled situation by holding out a decisive hand to Joe and saying:

"I know you're Mr. Greer. I'm Mrs. Williamson."

She wasn't excessively small, but his first impression of her, nevertheless, was as something jewel-like, finished out to an incredible perfection in detail, and, despite the rough texture and non-fitting cut of the sport-suit she affected, he felt a sensuous sickness about her which these contrasts perhaps heightened. And she was Williamson's wife. Man alive! She couldn't be the mother of that girl in the picture, could she? The resemblance seemed to prove it. It needed her laugh and the withdrawal, not brusque, though, of her hand to remind him that he had been staring.

"I suppose you'd like to shoot me for interrupting," she said; "but you've no idea how—well it was to hear a noise like this coming from the traps, golf and billiards and bridge are so-very enough, but there's nothing compared to these Sunday morning clay pigeons. This looks like fun. Do you suppose I could hit one?"

So she stayed, and took her turn; actually managed to smash a target or two. It wasn't long before they'd shot away all the cartridges. By that time Joe had become aware that the other two men were getting remote; not hostile, he thought, but he couldn't be sure. But they're resent a certain lack of ceremony between him and the woman? Wasn't she supposed to have appeared at all? And shouldn't he, according to their ideas, have met her half-way? But she, sensing the new atmosphere herself, spoke out about it. "These two men," she said to Joe, "are feeling ashamed of themselves. Now that I've caught them playing hooky, and they're getting ready to be very severe to make up for it. Do you want to stay with them and shoot, properly, or do you want to have a walk with me? You haven't seen the place, have you?"

Violet Williamson, during the two hours or so that were left of that Sunday morning, not so much stirred Joe, though she did that, too, as stirred him up; agitated a lot of thoroughly precipitated ideas which had been lying undisturbed in the bottom of his mind for a long time, and set them adrift. She belonged, he decided, in a category the existence of which he'd never suspected; she thrilled him with a sense of discovery.

He got the idea that she had some objective, for there was nothing in her about the way she looked him, and the pace was, considering that she was a woman and the morning was brisk. She knew how to walk and was properly shod and clad for it. Her housecoat skirt was short and light, and outlined, with agreeable frankness, her straight, slender legs.

She let him see at once that she had been inquiring about him. Apparently she'd started Henry Craven recalling some of his jungle stories. He tried to follow this lead, but it went against the current of his thoughts and he didn't make much of it; felt rather tongue-tied, somehow, and a bit resentful, suspecting that she wanted him to exhibit himself as a curiosity, the wilder and queerer the better. A rather audacious speculation of hers about the number of cannibal prisoners that he might have made love to didn't help matters, either.

When they emerged from the grove they were upon the crest of the low ridge, and what fell away before them was a wide expanse of lawn. The house was in full view, presenting its terrace and its long facade of Georgian windows. There was a swimming-pool, its curb gleaming white like marble, and the water in it, for some reason he didn't understand, showing turquoise. There were tennis-courts marked out in startling white upon the green of the lawn, and two great umbrellas of orange and white. A garden, tumultuous in color, was just beyond.

Joe stopped and stood at gaze. "I'm glad you brought me up here," he said. He was aware she wasn't looking at herself, but was watching him intently.

There was a hickory nut built round the trunk of a giant outlier of the grove, and with him she moved over to it. As soon as he was seated, however, she got up and, unceremoniously, sat upon the grass. "You like it to look at," she said, "for a minute, like this, on a bright spring Sunday morning. And in a couple of weeks it will be even better. Her, when the kids are all getting home from school, and the pool there will be alive with them, and the courts. The color's gorgeous then, with the swimming things they wear and white arms and legs all over the place. It's a good show. You must come up and see it."

He began saying he'd like to, but she hadn't yet got to what was in her mind, and, with a nod, went on: "Really, though, except as a show, to look at now and then, doesn't it bore you to death? The whole thing, I mean—our sort of thing, the sort of people we are?"

For a random shot this came close home.

"I don't know any of you very well," he said, lamely. "I'm not bored now."

"Oh, I suppose it's too much to expect you to talk out," she said, disconcerted.

"I Don't Know Any of You Very Well,"

He Answered.

created. "Especially after I've been rubbing you the wrong way as we came along just now." She overrode his gesture of protest. "Oh, yes I did. You thought I was just asking silly questions, like a girl meeting her first actor. It wasn't that exactly, but it sounded like it."

He tried to tell her he hadn't struck him like that. His jungle experience was a long way back, and this morning it had seemed especially remote. He hadn't been able to get into the swing of it.

She nodded amiably. "Some time you'll feel like it," she said, "and then you'll tell me."

The implication that there were going to be times, ample, unlimited times, for talking together like this, stirred him, half frightened him. He recalled, illogically, an observation of Jennie MacArthur's. "The right wife for you," she'd said, "would have to be silly, 'way up in the society game. You'd have to be proud, whenever you thought of it, that you'd got her." He felt the blood springing to his forehead.

"You keep going," she said, "from the time you're quite small, thinking that life's going to open out somehow, like a door. And then some day you wake up and realize you're thirty-five or so, and that it doesn't mean to open out at all; there isn't any door—not to the thing you're in. And then you hear about somebody who's never been shut up, in anything; somebody the whole world's always been open to. And you try to get people to tell you about him. John and Jimmy Wallace and Henry and Margaret Craven—Margaret's funny about you. You wonder what that kind of freedom feels like. I should think you'd feel."

She looked around at him suddenly, "with us, you know, like a big moon, or something, that finds itself shut up in our pasture with the Holsteins."

She'd startled him again, this time into a laugh. It didn't occur to him as a possibility that her cousin Henry might have quoted that phrase of his about staid people to her.

He saw that his laugh had annoyed her; more or less he understood why: he hadn't played up.

"I guess freedom's always a thing we think someone else has," he commented. "It made me laugh that you should have thought of me like that. The two really different kinds of people in the world are the ones who have been hungry and the ones who haven't—I don't mean dying. I mean against their will."

That brought her gaze round to him, a look of clear wonder in her eyes. "Have you?" she asked.

It launched him, that wondering look, into a vein of biography which would have afforded Jennie MacArthur a grin. "You'd have to be wonderful to hear all the time, and mysterious," Jennie had remarked, constructing that hypothetical wife for him.

It was the story of Ishmael, the son of Hagar, that he told her—"his hand against every man and every man's hand against him." He'd found his real jungle, he said, in the streets and alleys, the lamp-posts and the foggy dry-yards of civilized society. He'd never belonged to any union, any organization of any sort. He'd got most of his jobs, back in those years—the troubled, panicky, early nineties—working as a strike-breaker. He showed her what it meant to load pigeon all day, a day being an eternity of ten hours; and then, before he could regain what shelter he called home to have to evade, or outwit, the pickets—to slink along in the shadows, alert for ambushes, ready at any moment to fight or flee for his life.

She said very little while the tale went on, but that extra, jungle sense of his told him that she was completely plastic to it. She didn't look at him much—sat staring off into vacancy; and this permitted his gaze to feed upon her at will. He devoured every line and contour of her. He could see the faint pulse at the base of her throat; he watched her breathe. It was thus, at last, that he lost the thread of his story and stopped.

She allowed his silence to lie unbroken between them for so long that he was upon the point of some bald apology for having talked so much about himself, when at last she spoke.

"Well, I bet you're glad if I stop now, because it's been a long time since you've got me and I've never turned socialist, wanting to divide everything up, or anything silly like that. I suppose you didn't want it divided up; you wanted it all for yourself. So you went off to the jungle, and made your fortune somehow, and then you came back and showed them."

He didn't correct this chronological misconception of hers; the picture as she saw it accorded better with her mood. "It wasn't much of a fortune"

I made down there," he qualified. "Twenty-seven hundred dollars that I got for some curios I brought out with me in a bag and sold to a museum."

She trusted a little touch of drama he'd prepared, by not asking him what the curios were. She got reluctantly to her feet. "You'll have to tell me about that next time," she said. "I know it would be like 'The Arabian Nights,' and if I let you get started again, I'll sit here listening all day. You go to drive over to the Stannards' at Lake Geneva for lunch, with John, and I expect I'll be horribly late now—Oh, that doesn't matter. She went on, across his attempt to express contrition. "He probably won't speak to me all the way, but that'll only give me more time to think about the things you've been telling me."

They were walking now, she setting a very leisurely pace, down the slope toward the house.

"What I can't get over," she remarked, "is the places you must have been, the things you must have seen. I've never been in any place more exciting than St. Moritz or Paris."

"Well, you've got it on me," he said. "I've never been to any of those places."

She stopped to stare at him. "You mean you've never been to Europe at all?" she asked.

He shook his head. "Never had time. I'll get around to it some day, of course."

She laughed. "It was just thinking," she explained, "that I'd like to be there when you do. Like to go along and show it to you; see how it took you. Oh, the galleries and the cathedrals and such, of course; but other things, too: Longchamps and Henley, and the Easter week bull-fights in Madrid."

"That's what Sorolla said," he told her.

She stepped again to stare. "Sorolla?"

He nodded. "That what you said—that he'd like to see how I took it, the building and the Prado and all."

"When did you know Sorolla?" she asked. Her laugh seemed to be directed at her own astonishment.

"When he was here. I bought a picture of his, one of those seashore things. I'd like you to see it some time. It's better than the one they've got at the Institute. He painted a portrait of me, and then he wouldn't let me have it. Took it back to Spain with him. We got pretty well acquainted. I can talk Spanish, you see, better than English; politer, anyhow."

She digested that in silence until they got to where his car was standing in the drive. Even then she made no move to leave him.

"A commander you," she said, "and take you over to the Stannards, except that you'd be so bored you'd never forgive me."

He thought it best not to insist that he wouldn't be. He offered the excuse of work to do, and, getting into his car, seated himself at the wheel. "You will come to see the Sorolla some time?" he asked. "Come to dinner, you and your husband?"

She accepted this invitation a little absently. Then promptly corrected her manner and told him, with polite enthusiasm, she'd love to. Still she lingered for a moment beside his car, her elbows on the door, one foot on the running-board. She asked him suddenly what he was smiling at.

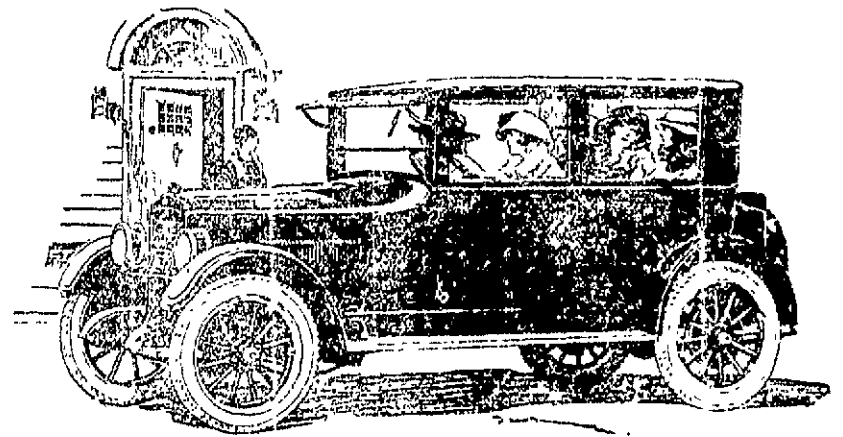

"Speaking of bull-fights reminded me I fought a bull once myself. In the public square at Quito. I jumped over the barrier on a bet a girl had just made with me."

JEWETT SIX

PAIGE BUILT

Think of an Enclosed Jewett at $1325

Never a Body Built Like This Brougham—Baked Enamel Finish, Wood Frame

THIS new 5-passenger Jewett Brougham is a triumph of enclosed body construction. Never was such a body built before. And it's not to be had on any other car. An enclosed Jewett FOR BUT $1325!

Paige designers have done what was said to be impossible—combined a permanent baked enamel finish ALL OVER THE CAR on steel panels—with a wood frame. Wood, because wood absorbs vibration, eliminates "drumming" and reduces noise to nil.

Each steel body panel is dipped in enamel and baked three separate times, with a rub between each coat, then fastened to the wood frame. Baking is done separately because the intense heat required to bake enamel would warp wood.

Jewett Brougham has a smart, glossy, permanent finish ALL OVER THE CAR that you see on fenders ONLY of other cars. It stays good-looking—no attention needed other than washing. You'll marvel at this finish achieved by Paige engineers.

Cleverest seating arrangement for 5 adults you ever saw! Two individual front seats, both folding forward. Easy entrance and exit for all passengers on either side. Ample leg room front and rear. Rear seat 46½ inches wide, seats three. Rear cushion is removable, giving ample carrying space for merchandise, luggage or sample trunk.

And this new type Brougham is mounted on the famous, sturdy Jewett Six chassis. You know what that means—full 50 h. p. 6-cylinder motor, giving a closed car with open car performance. From 2 to 60 miles an hour in high; beats most any car's time up any hill; picks up from 5 to 25 mi. an hour in 7 seconds, in high.

In all our experience we've never seen a closed car of such character and merit for $1325 factory. Come in. Sit in it. Examine all its features. Drive it—today!
